@HalfordPHT @botchford what does Benning care about 2-3 years down the line? If he didn't wave something shiny in front of FA, he'd be gone.

Brock Boeser looked to have injured his arm during Sunday's loss to the Vegas Golden Knights, getting caught between teammate Elias Pettersson and the Knights' Ben Hutton Brock Boeser has 19 goals and 38 points in 64 games for the Canucks so far this season. Photo by Sergei Belski /USA TODAY Sports files Brock Boeser's tough season just got worse. This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. The right-winger is dealing with an "upper-body" injury, the National Hockey League team announced Tuesday ahead of a scheduled pre-road trip practice at Rogers Arena. The team plays in Vegas on Wednesday and Arizona on Thursday. Boeser hurt his arm or wrist in the second period of Sunday's 3-2 overtime loss to the Vegas Golden Knights when teammate Elias Pettersson tried to hit Ben Hutton near the boards in the neutral zone and Boeser's arm got caught between them. Boeser was collateral damage in the collision, his right arm appearing to hyper-extend. Boeser went to the dressing room for assessment, but returned to play in the third period. "He's still being evaluated," Canucks head Bruce Boudreau said after practice Tuesday at Rogers Arena. Boeser will not travel with the Canucks on a two-game road trip to Las Vegas Wednesday and Arizona on Thursday. This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. "We'll know more about his situation once we get back," Boudreau added. Boeser has 19 goals and 38 points in 64 games this season but it's been a difficult second half to the season for him. He has scored seven power-play goals since Christmas but has just three even-strength goals in that time. For a player that the team had hoped would be a first-line scorer, it just hasn't been enough. On top of that, he's in the final year of a three-year contract, with this summer calling for a US $7.5-million qualifying offer from the Canucks to at least keep his rights. Besides his stuttering production, Boeser has posted a career-low shooting percentage and yet more questions about his durability. Not exactly a strong negotiating position. The Canucks could take him to arbitration and try to reduce his salary for next season, and he would appear to be a good case for the team to do so. The 25-year-old Boeser has dealt with injuries in every season of his Canucks career, starting with a bruised foot early in his rookie season and then that campaign coming to an early end when he hurt his back in a freak crash into an open bench door. He hurt his groin early in his sophomore season, an injury he later admitted was due to him trying to rush back from his back injury the previous season. Boeser started his third season in concussion protocol and then later damaged his ribs, missing 12 games and only returning to the lineup in the final game before the pandemic started. In the pandemic-shortened 2020-21 season, Boeser actually didn't miss any games and was the team's best all-around forward. This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. He began this season on the injured list because of an undisclosed injury suffered in pre-season. Boeser's latest injury is just the latest in a late-season run of injuries for the Canucks after the team went mostly unscathed — other than nearly every player landing in COVID-19 protocol — for most of the season. Boudreau said Tuesday that he didn't think it was likely Nils Hoglander would be back this season. The sophomore winger is believed to be dealing with a groin injury and hasn't skated since coming up lame in a March 17 practice. Sophomore winger Nils Hoglander, believed to have sustained a groin injury in practice, likely won't return this season, says coach Bruce Boudreau. Photo by Mike Ehrmann /Getty Images And defenceman Tucker Poolman, who had been out with migraines since late January, is also likely done for the year, too. Poolman suited up on Sunday for the Canucks, his first game since Jan. 29 in Winnipeg, but left in the first period and didn't return. This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. Boudreau said Tuesday the veteran defenceman is once again dealing with migraines. Moreover, Canucks players are battling a stomach bug, which the team said is not COVID-19 related. The team cancelled practice on Monday as a preventative measure, as several more players came down ill with a stomach ailment that had sidelined first captain Bo Horvat, then Brad Richardson in previous days. "A couple guys were throwing up and we didn't want that to filter through the team," Boudreau said. Star defenceman Quinn Hughes was among those dealing with the infection and wasn't well enough to practise on Tuesday. He was not expected to travel with the team to Vegas on Tuesday afternoon. "We're hoping he ends up making the trip," Boudreau said. "Hopefully he feels much better tonight." This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. The Canucks called up defenceman Jack Rathbone from their AHL Abbotsford Canucks affiliate under emergency conditions on Tuesday. Horvat said on Saturday he felt pretty rough for about 48 hours — he first felt ill Wednesday afternoon — but was fine by Saturday's practice. Jason Dickinson returned to the lineup Sunday after being out since Feb. 24, a span of 16 games, but Matthew Highmore remains out with an upper-body injury. • The Canucks announced Tuesday that, in light of changes in provincial health guidelines, fans and employees will no longer have to show proof of vaccination to attend games at Rogers Arena and Abbotsford Centre. pjhonston@postmedia.com twitter.com/risingaction More news, fewer ads, faster load time: Get unlimited, ad-lite access to the Vancouver Sun, the Province, National Post and 13 other Canadian news sites for just $14/month or $140/year. Boeser was well on his way to another 55-point season before suffering a rib injury in February. He instead ended the regular season with 45 points in 57 contests while shooting a career-low 9.5 percent. Boeser showed no ill effects during the playoffs, tallying 11 points in 17 games as the Canucks fell in the Western Conference semifinals. Never much of a physical player, Boeser's fantasy value comes from his consistency and 25-goal potential. When healthy, he should challenge a 60-point pace, but he's missed time in all three of his full NHL campaigns so far. Still, expect the high-volume shooter to make a large impact on the scoresheet, making him worthy of an early-to-middle round pick on draft day. Boeser enjoyed a stellar sophomore campaign with Vancouver in 2018-19, scoring 26 goals and 56 points in 69 games. He finished third in Canucks scoring, trailing only Bo Horvat (61 points) and Elias Pettersson (66). After averaging 17:30 of ice time in his rookie campaign, Boeser played nearly two more minutes per contest last season, ending with 19:10. Only 15 of Boeser's 56 points came on the power play, which means there's plenty of room for growth if he ups his production with the man advantage. Finally, fans of Boeser could probably stand to see him throw the body around a bit more than what he showed throughout the 2018-19 season, as he finished the year with just 14 hits. At 6-foot-1, Boeser has the size to impact games on a physical level, which would benefit not only his team but also his fantasy owners on nights where points may be hard to come by. Boeser was dynamic in his rookie season, scoring 29 goals and 55 points in just 62 games to lead the Canucks in scoring and establish himself as one of the league's most dangerous snipers. He's a worthy candidate to the mantle vacated by the Sedins and already sits at the top of the depth chart on a team that lacks scoring punch. After eschewing scoring talent for grit during free agency, the Canucks will continue to lean on Boeser on offense, and a 40-goal season isn't out of the question. Just 10 of his 29 goals last season came on the power play, so that number will surely improve. His fantasy value is discounted playing on a losing team without an elite center, but Boeser has the ability to create offense from very little and should be one of the top wingers in the league for 2018-19. Boeser got his first taste of NHL action in 2016-17, scoring the game-winner in his NHL debut and notching three goals in the following eight games. While he only appeared in nine games total, Boeser was very impressive, showcasing his lethal shot and terrific skating ability. The North Dakota product is projected to be a key part of Vancouver's offense in the coming years, but he's not likely to play a full season in 2017-18 due to the team's late-offseason pickup of Thomas Vanek. Eventually, the 20-year-old could land on a line with Bo Horvat, meaning we may be looking at the NHL's next dynamic duo. Boeser has a very high ceiling and will likely be given a significant power-play role down the line; he's definitely one to watch.
